Opportunity Zones are everywhere: Literally and figuratively. The place-based economic incentive has launched a frenzy for deals in these 8,000 zones spread throughout the country. This new tax incentive is designed to spur investment in these specific geographies, and the Bay Area has Zones throughout San Francisco, San Jose, Oakland, as well as Redwood City, Fremont, Gilroy and elsewhere. Downtown San Jose in particular is getting a lot of buzz. In addition to real estate developers, commercial tenants are also poised to benefit. So how does the incentive work, and how can real estate industry professionals, and tenants take advantage?
